FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

Thou hast beheld, when childhood blossomed gay,
And to the morning gave its rich perfume,
Thou hast beheld its petals grace display,
Rejoicing in the Eden of their bloom;—
Dear is the loveliness of childhood, fair,
Rich is the fragrance lent to morning's breath,
But sainted charms are consecrated there,
When sweetly pillowed on the bed of death.

RELIGION! Thou art all a noble theme
For inspiration, thou thyself inspired;—
Wakener of bliss! beyond the poet's dream,
Daughter of Love! in majesty attired
Thou walkest the heavens, yet converse hold'st with men;—
Dweller in Light! within whose ample ken
Lies the broad realm of happiness, I greet
Thee, Essence, not approachless!—with glad feet
Will I attend thee, fountain of my joy,
And quaff from thy right hand, pleasures that ne'er will cloy!

A VISION.

It was in a wild bower, where fragrant and green
Hung many a tendril which nature had twined,
I carolled in fancy—gay—thoughtful—serene,—
And many fond images played on my mind.

In a twinkling the scenes of my childhood appeared,
Some cheerful—some dark, and embittered with tears,—
The friends which my youth with affection revered,
The tie often riven—young love's sighs and fears.

The present and future alternately claimed,
A tear,—a fond hope, which a cloud often veil'd:
Can the present a sign for the future be named,
Or the morrow yet prosper the hopes that have failed!

I marked, with a sigh, on futurity's page
The path-way with many of life's thorns was cloyed;
Breeding ills unforeseen in my earlier age
The current of bliss with their poison alloyed.

On the ocean before me sailed many a bark,—
Which through tempests and calms sped its chequering way,
And sunk in the gulf—great—mysterious, and dark—
Never more to appear in the light of our day!

Creation still smiled—and new ages appeared,—
Thought still followed thought, in their unceasing sway,
It was done!—Now the last trumpet's echoes were heard
"Earth and sea gave their dead,"—nature melted away!!

THE CRUCIFIXION.

Imitated from the Italian of Crescembini.

BY JAMES MONTGOMERY

I ask'd the Heavens;—"What foe to God hath done
"This unexampled deed?"—The Heavens exclaim,
"'Twas Man;—and we in horror snatch'd the sun
"From such a spectacle of guilt and shame."

I ask'd the Sea;—the Sea in fury boil'd,
And answer'd with his voice of storms,—"'Twas Man;
"My waves in panic at his crime recoil'd,
"Disclosed the abyss, and from the centre ran."

I ask'd the Earth,—the Earth replied aghast,
"'Twas Man;—and such strange pangs my bosom rent,
"That still I groan and shudder at the past."
—To Man, gay, smiling, thoughtless Man, I went,
And ask'd him next;—He turn'd a scornful eye,
Shook his proud head, and deign'd me no reply.

MARRIAGE—a Parody.

"To woo or not to woo"—That's the question;
Whether 'tis wiser in a Man to suffer
The screws and pinches of a straightened fortune,
Or to take arms 'gainst some rich widow's suitor,
And, by opposing, beat them. To woo—to wed—
No more: and by a Wedding say we silence
The creditor, and a thousand loud mouth'd pests
That bark at poor men—tho' the consummation
Were little to be wish'd. To woo—to wed!
To wed—perchance to be hen-peck'd. There's the rub—
For in that unison what jars may come,
When we have shuffled on the fatal yoke,
Must give us pause. There's the respect
That makes our celibacy last so long;
For who would bear the plagues of poverty,
The Fair's neglect; the Dandies contumely;
The pangs that duns inflict; the laws pursuit;
The dearth of dinner, and the mournful waste
That active time in galligaskins wears,
When he himself might his quietus make
With a gold ring! Who'd live a subaltern,
To drill and dress under a martinet,
But that the dread of something after marriage,
(That knot indissoluble, from whose noose
No sufferer can be freed,) puzzles the will,
And makes us rather bear our own mishaps
[illegible] fly to others that a Wife would bring.—
Thus Women do make noodles of us all;
And thus the bare attempt at a flirtation
Is strangled by the terror of a match,
And many a pleasant, freedom-loving youth,
With this regard his courtship turns awry,
And shuns the name of Husband.

THE SOLITAIRE—No. III.

"The worthiest people are most injured by Slanderers, as we usually find that to be the best fruit which the birds have been picking at."
DEAN SWIFT.

There are many persons whose chief pleasure is to wound the reputation of their neighbours. They will descend from your public to your private character—from the affairs of the parlour down to the petty concerns of the kitchen. This mean and ungenerous spirit; these ill-natured humours; this more than fiend-like disposition is so extremely base and absurd, that if instances of it did not daily occur through life it would be almost impossible for a man of sense to believe them. How abject and mean must that man be who cannot converse but upon the vices of his fellow beings—who is always ready to report any thing to their disadvantage, and careful to conceal whatever good qualities they may possess. Slander is like a heavy shower, and though you may stand dry under the pent-house of your conscience, the world does not see it, and what is worse they will not see it. Men in this respect differ from angels—they having more joy over one fallen sinner than over a hundred just persons. It is in the power of every person to preserve his probity, but no man living can say, that he can preserve his reputation while there are so many evil tongues in the world ready to blast the fairest character, and so many open ears ready to receive their reports. Cicero in one of his pleadings, defending his client from general scandal, says:—"There are many who have particular engagements to the prosecutor; there are many who are known to have ill-will to him for whom I appear; there are many who are naturally addicted to defamation, and envious of any good to any man, who may have contributed to spread reports of this kind: for nothing is so swift as scandal, nothing is more easily sent abroad, nothing received with more welcome, nothing diffuses itself so universally. I shall not desire, that if any report to our disadvantage has any ground for it, you would overlook or extenuate it: But if there be any thing advanced, without a person can say whence he had it, or which is attested by one who forgot who told him it, or who had it from one of so little consideration that he did not then think it worth his notice, all such testimony as these, I know you will think too slight to have any credit against the innocence and honour of your fellow citizen."
G.

To Die!—Ah, solemn sound! yet sure nature recoils at the gloomy thought and fain would pass it over. The tyrant may forget the object of his revenge, the parent her smiling offspring, and man his God, but death remembers man must die.—Our lot remains unchanged—our doom fixed.—Earthly splendour has no exemption from his shafts: youth and beauty must obey his mandates. To day in health, to-morrow food for worms.—The tender ties of earth cannot prolong our stay: the tear of paternal fondness, conjugal affection, avail not; the tide of life spent, we must depart to worlds unknown. The pillow of disease is the moment of reflection;—we then cast a retrospective eye on time past in improprieties; we bid them not welcome: the intruders fix on our minds, and torture our departing spirits.

View this picture, ye giddy triflers; ye fashionable libertines, cease to mock Omnipotence. In the last dread conflict, friends may wish in vain; nature's struggle lost: Death is conqueror still—reflect—reform.

THE ITINERANT—No. IV.

"From grave to gay, from lively to severe."

DIGNIFIED CONDUCT OF A YOUNG LADY.—Eliza Embert, a young Parisian lady, resolutely discarded a gentleman to whom she was to have been married, because he ridiculed Religion. Having given him a gentle reproof, he replied, "That a man of the world would not be so old fashioned as to regard God and religion." Eliza started!—but on recovering herself, said, "From this moment, when I discover that you do not respect Religion, I cease to be yours. He who does not love and honor God, can never love his wife constantly and sincerely.

GENIUS.—The consciousness of genius is always at first accompanied with diffidence. No forward child, however extraordinary the promise of his childhood, ever produced any thing truly great.

MUTABILITY OF FASHION.—A gentleman who had been commissioned by his wife to make a purchase for her at a milliner shop, being accosted by a friend on his return, begged to be excused from stopping, as he had bought a bonnet for his wife, and was afraid the fashion would change before he got home.

INSCRIPTION.—In a Latin inscription on the tomb of Mr Rush, a Vinegar merchant at Chapham, England, it is stated that he was a greater man than Hannibal, as the Carthagenian general only cut his way through the Alps with vinegar, but Mr. Rush cut his way through the world with it.

TO KNOW OUR PROFESSION only is enough for one man to know; and this (whatever the professors may tell you to the contrary,) is soon learned. Be content, therefore, with one good employment; for if you profess to understand two at a time, people will give you business in neither.

ADDISON.—Dr. Burnet, speaking of Addison, says, "He had the profoundest veneration for the great God of Heaven and earth that ever I observed in any person. The very name of God was never mentioned by him without a pause and a visible stop in his discourse."

HOPE.—A ship should not be moored by one anchor, nor life on a single hope.

PEACE.

Celestial peace! all lovely as thou art!
Dear as the blood that warms the human heart,
Patron of Science! nurse of every good,
The rich man's blessing, and the poor man's food,
O, may thy gentle influence still prevail,
Trade ope her mines, and Commerce spread her sail.

The Hogshead of Odd Things—No. 1.

'Homo sum, et humani a me nil alienum puto.'

Messrs Editors,

The poverty of our greatest authors is not unfrequently spoken of by some as though they considered it the almost unavoidable concomitant of a great genius. They suppose that to be learned we must be poor, and that whoever seeks to acquire the honour and reputation of a great scholar, must consign himself to misery and want.—But I am rather inclined to believe that the acquisition of knowledge is not so much the dissipation of wealth, as the absence of wealth is necessary for the acquirement of knowledge. It has been said by one who well knew the labours of study, that "unless the mind be impelled by some impetuous necessity it will seldom exert its powers even to obtain its fondest wishes,"—and if we examine into the lives of those who have been most distinguished for their scientific attainments, it will generally be found that they have arisen from a lowly and humble condition. It was not their eager thirst for praise, nor the desire of being useful that alone excited them to action; but, as one very candidly confesses, "they were driven on by the fear of evil, rather than attracted by the prospect of good."

The mind of man is naturally roving and unsettled. Active in creating its own native fancies and pursuing them through the wide regions of imagination. Hence the greatest exertion is required to bring it within proper subjection, and bind it down to those subjects to which it is naturally averse. And the more it has been allowed to range at its own will, the more it has been suffered to indulge in the gratification and amusements afforded by wealth, the more averse it becomes to the tedious application that is necessary to be given to the principals of science. While the man of letters is spending the younger and more vigorous part of his life in the seclusion of study, the man of wealth is enjoying all the ease and luxury of life. He sits enthroned amid the dazzling profusion of grandeur, from which he looks down upon the admiring multitude. The student long labours in obscurity, and when he comes forth among men, to a great proportion he must still remain unknown. The wealthy man is seen, known and admired by all, but the learned understood only by the few. What wonder, then, if learning should flourish most among the poorer class! or, rather, what wonder if the wealthy are not willing to give up the ease and happiness wealth affords for the more uncertain attainments of knowledge.

It is known to many of your readers, that one of the best productions our language affords, and which Dr. Young justly calls "a mass of sense," was written to defray the funeral expences of the author's mother, and many instances of the kind may be cited to show that necessity is the principal inducement to application. It has been said by some that the learned authors were anxious to point out the disadvantages of wealth, and the dangerous circumstances attending its possession, merely because they were deprived of the comforts it procures. Be this as it may, my present purpose is only to consider whether it is not very apt to retard, if not utterly impede the progress of students, by engaging their time and attention in the more pleasing and less advantageous pursuit of objects, which it continually presents to allure them from the direct road of knowledge.—This road has always been represented by its travellers as steep and difficult; yet many set out with light hopes and ambitious views, without considering the difficulties they must encounter and the continual labours they must endure—They take a wide survey of the field of science, and vainly hope, at one effort, to grasp its beauties and its treasures. But before they have proceeded far this delusion vanishes, and but a few are found bold enough to withstand the shock of disappointment. They are those to whom fortune displays none of her gifts; for whom ease spreads no couch; for whom luxury has nothing to bestow, and within whose ears the syren voice of pleasure has never sounded.

THE BRIDAL;
OR, THE VILLAGE FESTIVAL.

It was during my tour in France, that I passed through the village of T———, not many miles distant from Paris. Rosy tinted morn had not long glowed in the east—the dew of heaven yet sparkled upon the ground—the feathered songsters still melodiously warbled their matin hymn of gratitude and praise:—and the opening flowers casting their fragrance upon the bosom of the passing zephyr, scented the air with their sweets. I had set out early in order to gain the city before the meridian sun interposed its rays to rob expansive nature of her charms. As I proceeded, all at once,

———"A breathing sound
Rose like a stream of rich distilled perfumes,
And stole upon the ear."

I turned me round, and on a green sward observed a number of peasants of both sexes, bedecked in their holiday clothes, dancing to the merry notes of the guitar and tamborine. I dismounted from my horse, and giving him in charge of a boy at the road-side, repaired to the spot to take a more minute survey of the joyful assemblage. As I approached near, I was saluted by an elderly and venerable personage, (likely, the master of the ceremonies,) who, while he bade me welcome, informed me that they were celebrating the annual festival of their Hamlet, which, on this occasion, was rendered unusually attractive in consequence of a wedding that was about to take place. I had not long been a spectator, before I readily distinguished the youthful bride and bridegroom. The latter appeared, like Apollo, tall, finely formed, and graceful in all his movements, with a countenance which bespoke the felicity that awaited him, and which was reflected from a quick, pleasing and animated pair of sparkling eyes.—But the bride—the perfect model of loveliness—she could not have numbered more than seventeen summers—her skin like alabaster, and on her cheek the blushing rose and lily dwelt,

———"Whose red and white,
Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on."

Her deportment was easy and modest, and seemed to retire from rather than court admiration; while, as "sunny smiles" would pass over her face a thousand little charms seemed to break forth from their concealment.

When the amusements had concluded, they took the path to the village chapel, accompanied by a train of relatives and friends, while I also followed close in the rear. The holy father was ready with his book—the youth led the trembling maid to the altar, and as she breathed forth her responses, I never heard a voice so melodious—it was soft as "summer winds," and "tender as the sound of love."

* * * * * I had tarried too long—I hastened from the enchantress, wondering within myself how any human being could resist woman's matchless charms.

"POP THE QUESTION."

Fudge! said my father to me one day, when I told him, that I had made up my mind to marry Miss Q. How do you know she'll have you boy! Have you popped the question yet? What do you mean sir, (said I,) by popping the question? Pho (said my father,) if that's all you know about courting, be assured you'll live single all your life—go and ask the girl if she knows what it means.

As I had long indulged a passion for Miss Q. I had hopes from my favourable reception, of making her my wife; but never had the courage to ask her to have me. Often had I sat down, and wrote the most eloquent speeches, which I carefully committed to memory, for the purpose of making my love known to her; but my heart always failed me when the time came for their delivery. At this time long boots were worn, the tassels of which were torn to pieces, and the ends of my fingers bit to the quick, while making an effort to deliver my address. My throat always became dry, and my memory failed me so, that I could neither think of what I wished to say, nor speak if I had thought. Every moment I fixed the next for the time to begin, but to no purpose; for I was dumb until my fair one would break the silence, by asking the news, or offering me "a penny for my thoughts." One evening as we sat upon the sofa, it occurred to my mind, the conversation which I had with my father, and I accordingly asked Miss Q. what the meaning of popping the question was? She hesitated a moment, and after recovering from a little embarrassment, very significantly observed, "I expected that was what brought you so often to our house. Before I can have you, you must ask father and mother; and if they have no objection, I'll"———what? I exclaimed, have me?—"yes." O what a simpleton (thought I,) have I been. A young lady unacquainted with the world, that she should have given herself away to a man, whose ignorance denied him all the pleasure of courtship! I could not sit, but got up and went home ashamed of myself, almost determined not to marry, because I had not asked my mistress to have me.

When I reached home, I told my father what had happened. He laughed heartily at me, and said that he knew how it would turn out. Be assured boy, (said he,) the girls are not such hard hearted creatures as the men choose to make them appear, and if young men would, instead of their sonnets and love-sick ditties, address them with, Miss will you have me, there would be very few of your three and four years courtship.—Pop the question right away.
EXPERIENCE.

A LADY'S FOOT.

What in nature is so beautiful, so lovely, so tender, as the little foot of a fair lady? Surely this sweet part of the form was made for execution yet unknown. The hand is exercised by orators to give force to utterance, and strength to expressions of the strongest passions. In grief the hand is irresistibly drawn to the bosom, and its pressure gives relief; the finger pointed in scorn is the plainest signal of contempt, and the hands clasped and uplifted to heaven, is the most solemn of all expressions. I have seen a woman in grief, and there was more sorrow in the attitude of her hand, and more meekness and plaintiveness in a certain mounted position of her fingers, than in the holiness of her uplifted countenance, or in the tear-drops that hung on her eye lashes. If the hand is so powerful and efficient an engine of the soul, why should the foot be considered merely the pedestal of the human statue? What gives the march to the hero, the stride to the conqueror, fleetness to the lover, attitude to woman? Who knows

The love that slumbers in a lady's foot?

If the cavalier throws himself at the feet of his mistress why should not his lips press and breathe on them the spirit of love? Why should not his hand impart to them the thrillings of its touches? Oh, how have I started, and longed for a mollitur manus imposuit, when I have beheld Crispin with his measure at the foot of a lady! Oh, how have I shuddered, when I have seen Belinda's dear little foot sink forever out of sight in the sitchy abyss of his palm! Oh, how have I quaked, when I have seen the dear little thing swallowed up forever in the grinding jaws of his fist! How too, has my fancy caught fire, when sitting at an awful distance from Dorinda, I have espied this sweet little integer nestling and cudling on her cricket! How has my imagination transformed the vile four-legged stool into a little shrine, and her foot into the offering of beauty to love!

COMMUNICATION.

Etimology of the words Sheriff and Attorney.

In the time of the Saxons, the freemen in every shire in England met twice a year under the presidency of the shire-beave, as he was then called, or Sheriff. This meeting was called the shire reaves torne, and was a court in which grievances was redressed, officers elected, &c. By degrees the freemen declined going in person, and those freemen that did still attend carried with them the proxies of those who staid at home, and he who thus went was said, according to the old Saxon, to go at-the-Torne, hence came the word Attorney.

FROM A LATE FRENCH TOURIST.

SCOTCH WOMEN.

The women of Glasgow have generally and judiciously kept the old Scotch cloak, which is exceedingly well appropriated to the rigorous climate of the country. This cloak, which is exceedingly like the Venetian domino, is pretty often of a dark woollen cloth of little show. The most elegant are of that pretty tartan stuff, which was fancied for some time by the ladies of Paris. The women of the lower classes, almost all those of the middling, and a considerable number of those of the higher classes, go barefooted. Some have adopted shoes only. The fashionable ladies who have adopted the Parisian dress have also borrowed the shape of their shoes, though in reality they are more like those of men; but this part of their accoutrements is what incommodes them the most, and is what they throw off with most pleasure when they are at liberty. A brilliant Scotch Belle has hardly exhausted the admiration of the fashionables in Glasgow, when she longs for solitude; and the first thought that occupies her in some bye-path, some solitary garden, or in the mysterious obscurity of her chamber, is not, as with us, the recollection of the last man who looked at her with a sigh, or the last woman who eclipsed her toilet; it is the impatient want of taking off her shoes and stockings, and to run with bare feet on the carpet, the turf, or the sand of the high road.

DEATH AND CUPID—A FABLE.

Jupiter sent forth Death and Cupid to travel together round the world, giving each of them a bow in his hand, and a quiver of arrows at his back. It was ordered by the disposer of human affairs, that the arrows of Love should only wound the young, in order to supply the decays of mortal man; and those of Death were to strike old age, and free the world from a useless charge. Our travellers being one day extremely fatigued with their journey, rested themselves under the covert of a wood, and throwing down their arrows in a promiscuous manner before them, they both fell fast asleep. They had not reposed themselves long, before they were awakened by a sudden noise. Hastily gathering up their arrows, each in the confusion took by mistake some of the darts that belonged to the other. By this means it frequently happened that Death vanquished the young, and that Cupid the old. Jupiter observed the error, but did not think proper to redress it, foreseeing that some good might arise from the unlucky exchange—and in fact, if men were wise, they would learn from this mistake, to be apprehensive of Death, in their youth and to guard against the amorous passion in old age.

ORIGIN OF THE NINE MUSES.

The Muses consisted originally of only three in number; Mnemosyne, Memory—Melete, Meditation—and Aede, Song. They were augmented to the number of nine, because the inhabitants of their ancient town, desirous of placing in the temple of Apollo, statues of the Muses, and possessing three of extraordinary beauty, they ordered three of the most skilled sculptors to execute, each, the statues of the three Muses. They completed the nine, from which it was proposed to select three, the most perfect: but the nine were so exquisitely beautiful, it was agreed to take them all, and place them in the temple, and call them the Nine Muses. From this accident they derive their origin, and the six other attributes of poetry were given to the additional sisters.

CALLIOPE the deeds of heroes sings,
Great CLIO sweeps to history the strings,
EUTERPE teaches mimes their silent show,
MELPOMENE presides o'er scenes of wo,
TERPSICHORE the flute's soft power displays,
And ERATO gives hymns, the gods to praise,
POLYMNIA'S shell inspires melodious strains,
URANIA, wise, the starry course explains,
And gay THALIA'S glass points out where folly reigns.

FOR THE SATURDAY EVENING POST.

THE IRISH PEOPLE.

Why do we not exert that benign virtue Charity, given us for wise purposes? Why do not the citizens of this favoured city come forward with their accustomed zeal and mitigate the heart-rending sufferings of that oppressed class of fellow beings on the other side of the water?—Who can read the dreadful accounts of famine, disease, and death, that is now desolating the habitations of Ireland, and not feel the sympathetic attribute of which our nature is susceptible on their account. Funds could be raised to some considerable amount and provisions could be sent, which might arrive there in two or three weeks. We might reasonably hope that such a relief, however small, would be very acceptable to the numerous poor of that unhappy country. If a few individuals would volunteer and begin a subscription for such a purpose, it is confidently believed that their labours would be crowned with success.
GALAWAY.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The London Hibernian Society, since the commencement of their schools in Ireland, have received under their tuition above one hundred and fifty thousand children, and above seven thousand adults. Among those educated in these schools, it is believed none have been arraigned for any crime, whereas it is calculated that about twenty-one out of a thousand in that country are committed to prison.

The Boston Female Jews Society, have resolved to appropriate their funds in future to the support of a missionary to the Jews, who reside in the countries bordering on the Mediterranean.

The eighth anniversary meeting of the Methodist Missionary Society for the York district, was lately held in York, England. Among the gentlemen who addressed the meeting, was the Rev. J. Hawtry, formerly an officer in the dragoons. From statements made to the meeting it appeared that the Methodists have employed in the four quarters of the world 130 missionaries, besides schoolmasters, &c. They have near 30,000 members, in society, about 200,000 hearers, and 10,000 heathen children under instruction, on their different Missionary stations; in the whole of which they reported improvements. There was raised throughout their societies last year, for their support 26,581*l.* and their expenditure was 24,451*l.*

Anti-Missionary Spirit.—The Palmyra, (N. Y.) Gazette, states that a deputation of five chiefs from the Six Nations, lately arrived at that village, the principal object of which, seems to be, to request the Friends to use their influence, to free them from the Missionaries now in their borders. Red Jacket made a speech, in which, after a long exordium, he said that the whites, who instituted and attended meetings among them, stole their horses, drove off their cattle, and taxed their lands.

A ludicrous and vexatious, but justice-terminated incident, occurred in this city on Tuesday last. A stranger who goes by the name of Parker, arrived in the steam boat and put up at one of our respectable public houses. Having ordered a pint of wine after dinner, it was deposited at his feet in a cooler, of which he was ignorant.—Not observing the mirth inspiring beverage beside his plate, he rose from the table in a violent passion, abused the landlord's name in the presence of his guests, proceeded to the bar room more loud and vociferous in his exclamations of resentment, that gentlemen at such a place, should meet with such accommodations—and in the midst of his tempestuous career, was suddenly arrested by an officer for having taken away without license, a gentleman's property to the amount of twenty-five hundred dollars. As the officer was leading his victim away, if not to better at least to more suitable lodgings, we understand the bar-keeper coolly said, pray do not be in such a hurry with the gentleman, suffer hi at least to drink his wine. We are gratified to that this is a foreign specimen of politer morality.—Baltimore Morning Chronic appear early in January—Price one dollar and a half.

The Philadelphia Index;
OR DIRECTORY FOR 1823.

HE public are respectfully informed, that the subscriber has made arrangements for the publication of a DIRECTORY, at the commencement (say first month) of the ensuing year. The orthography, heretofore the source of so many errors, shall be particularly attended to, and every exertion used to make it correct. Having, during the last twenty-five years, been more or less engaged in a manner conducive to a thorough acquaintance with the materials of what ought to form a correct Directory; the Editor presumes that his present undertaking will be found, at least, inferior to none of his predecessors. He disclaims all participation in former Directories, as well as supplements, second editions, &c.

It would be altogether useless to say any thing relative to the utility of a Directory—no house, public or private, should be without one; much less those in business. All Societies (Beneficial, Mechanical, &c.) will be noted; and it is respectfully hoped that they will furnish themselves with copies;—indeed the nature of the work would seem to claim a place on the table of every Society.

Proprietors, Agents and Masters of the different lines of Water Packets, Steam Boats, &c. would add to the gratification of their friends by having some copies on board. To those bound here, it would, it is presumed, be a great mean of furthering their inquiries relative to the residence and present business of many of their friends and correspondents.

The Editor takes this opportunity of returning his most fervent thanks to the gentlemen Directors of all the city Banks, for their generous encouragement—many having subscribed for five, and none for less than two copies.—This, added to other prospects, gives a promising assurance of a goodly number of readers; it will, of course, be an advantageous medium for advertisers—it affording them an opportunity of exhibiting their publications to a large portion of the public eye, for one year at least.

Advertisements inserted at the rate of five dollars per page; half a page three; and a quarter of a page two dollars.

☞ The work will be published by Mr. ROBERT DESILVER, No. 110 Walnut-street, where subscriptions, advertisements, &c. will be gratefully received. It is requested that all removals, formations and dissolutions of partnerships, changes in any way affecting the former business-name, may be left as above, in all the fore half of the month of December, where they shall receive every attention. Also, that the Presidents or Secretaries of the different Societies would furnish the names of their three principal officers, viz. President, Secretary and Treasurer.

The Officers of the different Fire Engine and Hose Associations, are requested to furnish the Publisher, about the above period, with the names of the Officers, the places where the several Engines and Hoses are situated, and such other concise particulars as they may feel desirous of communicating.

Those who desire it, may examine, at Mr. Robert Desilver's Bookstore, in a book prepared for the purpose, the names, alphabetically arranged, as taken down the week previous.

Mr. Thomas S. Manning, Printer, No. 11, South Sixth-street, will also receive subscriptions, advertisements, notices, &c.

Foreign Intelligence.

From the New York Commercial Advertiser.

TEN DAYS LATER FROM ENGLAND

By the arrival at Boston of the ship Triton, Capt. Bussey, in 31 days from Liverpool, the editors of the Commercial Advertiser have received from their attentive correspondents, files of London papers to the 10th and Liverpool of the 11th of July.

The contents of the foreign journals, from which we have made extracts, are of a more warlike aspect than those received by the last arrival, and strengthen the opinion, which we have never yet seen cause altogether to abandon, that the Turks will not accede to the terms proposed by Russia until force is employed. The horrible massacre of the Greeks at Scio, has excited the greatest indignation at St. Petersburgh and Moscow, and is stated to have produced a change in the views of Alexander, no way favourable to the continuance of peace. If such has been the effect produced by this barbarous policy, what are we to expect from the account of the more recent slaughter, in cold blood, at Constantinople, of the Greeks, residing in that city, who had offered themselves, and were accepted as hostages for the good behaviour of their few remaining brethren who escaped the butchering knives of the ferocious Musselmen? Alexander himself may be cajoled by the pressing representations made to him as to the dangers which threaten "legitimacy," by the establishment of free governments in the East. But we have yet to learn that the nobles of Russia, whose influence at any time can controul the decisions of the sovereign, are disposed to shut their eyes to the rights of humanity, and to allow those of their own faith to be exterminated, without making one effort to stay the hands of their blood thirsty persecutors.

We are glad to observe that success continues to attend the arms of Greece, and that there is some reason for believing the Porte is at last convinced, that all the attempts to reclaim the Morea are untenable. So confident do the Greeks appear of ultimate success, that they have actually issued a decree, declaring Turkey to be in a state blockade.

We were always of opinion, that the disturbances in Spain of which we have heard so much of late, were occasioned by the machinations of the enemies of the Constitutional system, and not the consequence of the change which had taken place. The Address of the Cortes, traced these excitements to emissaries from France, which had roused the indignation of the Spaniards to so high a pitch against the French in general, that Madrid was no longer safe for their Ambassador. Notwithstanding, the disaffected had again been at work. The answer of the King to the Cortes, is of a character to excite favorable anticipations, and to induce a persuasion that whatever may be his own secret wishes, or those of the enemies of liberty, all their attempts to create discord will fail of their intended effects.

On the 1st of July, in the British House of Commons, the Chancellor of the Exchequer introduced his Budget, by which it appears that there was a deficiency in the last quarter of the revenue of about 36,000*l.* sterling. The estimated expenses of the year, however, were 51,119,000*l.* and the income for the same period 54,252,000*l.* leaving a surplus of 3,133,000*l.*

The pretensions of the Emperor of Russia to the territory on the north west coast of America, had been the subject of some discussion in the House of Commons, by which we learn that the British ministry are hostile to the views of Alexander; but that the matter had been made the subject of negociation.

The King of England is said to have again altered his mind, and to have determined on paying a visit to Scotland.

LONDON, July 4.

The sufferings of our afflicted fellow creatures in Ireland are as piercing and appalling, as when we last besought the continued beneficence of our readers in their behalf. The contributions are exhausted! And what remains? A mass of wretchedness undiminished; or if the cry be more feeble, and the number of the victims be in aught reduced, it is not—with anguish we say so—it is not that the relief afforded to them has yet raised any above the recurrence of want, but that famine and pestilence have swept away thousands beyond the reach of sympathy.

July 7.

The Duke of York, it is said, has made over his estate at Oatlands, with all the growing crops, &c. to trustees, for the payment of his debts.

Miss M. Tree's benefit at Covent Garden Theatre, drew the largest amount that has been received on any night of the present season.

A duel was fought near London on Friday last, between Capt. O'Grady, M. P. attended by the Hon. John Lowther, and James Grattan, Esq. M. P. attended by the Hon. Charles Howard Butler Clarke, when after an exchange of shots the seconds interfered, and the parties shook hands before they left the ground.

BRUSSELS, July 1.

It was well known that the object of Lucien Bonaparte, Prince of Canino, to Brussels, was the marriage of his eldest son with the eldest daughter of the Count de Survilliers (Joseph Bonaparte.) This marriage was celebrated the day before yesterday at the town Hall, and the Church, with the usual ceremonies.

AUGSBURG, June 29.

Within the last week, we have had several private accounts of great successes gained by the Greeks in Thessaly.—The most recent advices, which we received yesterday, not only confirm these accounts, but furnish a number of details, the result of which is, that the Turkish Corps d'Armee have been successfully defeated; namely, Chourschid Pacha, at Karditza, near Trikala, by Diamantis; the Pacha of Salonica, at Cara Veria, and the Turkish Corps d'Armee, which was entrenched in the environs of Larissa, and which had joined a detached corps of Salonica. This last victory was gained the 4th of June, in the environs of Zeitouni, by three Greek corps united, under the orders of Ypsilanti, Diamanti, and Odysseus. By this last victory, the plan of operation formed at Constantinople to effect the subjection of the Morea has entirely failed. The Greeks are again masters of Thessaly, with the exception of some forts and the town of Larissa. We expect shortly the official bulletin, which will doubtless be published by the provisional Greek Government at Corinth.

FROM SMYRNA.—An American gentleman, now at this place, has written to his friends in New York, to the following effect:

"SMYRNA, 17th May, 1822.

"Dear Sir—Our situation in this country remains about as distressing as ever; in fact, more so. Formerly, we were only doomed to witness daily murders in our streets; now, we see poor women and children torn from their homes, and sold to the Turks in Asia. The daughter of a poor Greek peasant sold to a Turkish Aga, may pass; but a young lady, brought up in all the luxury of affluence, sold to a rich Turkish boor, and with him to inhabit the hills and plains of Asia—a mother brought thus far with her children, companions of her misery—and then witnessing the state of one poor child after the other, to be scattered over the country—what can equal this? death is nothing to it. Strict orders have been given to prevent the sale of any of their slaves to any Christian: a few, have been bought by the force of money. All the men in Scio have been killed, and all the women and children made slaves. Not content with this, the Government at Constantinople are beheading the poor Sciots as fast as they can find them, although residents in that place for thirty or forty years."

A Friendly Fracas.—It appears from the Nantucket papers, that a good deal of excitement had taken place there, in consequence of a complaint having been preferred against a quaker, named William Holley, for an assault on Jeremiah Austin, another member of the Friends' Meeting. Holley having been arrested, an immense crowd followed him to the meeting-house, where he was taken for examination by a justice of the peace. By the evidence, it turned out, that Holley at the last preparative meeting of the Friends, took said Jeremiah from the steps of the said meeting-house, and prevented his entering the house on that day. Holley's defence was, that he was authorised so to do by a committee appointed by the members of Friend's Society, for that purpose. It appeared on evidence, that Jeremiah had been very troublesome heretofore in the monthly and preparative meetings, which had induced the members to adopt this measure. Holley was therefore acquitted.

FROM THE BOSTON EVENING GAZETTE.

A gross cheat was practised on Saturday last, upon one of the city Meal-men, at a shop in the W. part of the town. He offered some meal for sale, when a bystander engaged in conversation with him and invited him to try his luck at the Bowling Alley, which was attached to the shop.—Having won a few dollars, he was about to retire, but was induced to play longer, upon large odds being offered by his antagonist upon the share ball. In conclusion he was fleeced of his money amounting to $150.—It afterwards appeared that the pins had lines attached to them by which the fellows employed in setting them up for the players could pull them down so as to win the bet at their pleasure without being detected.

The agent to whom the money belonged has since pursued the winner, arrested him and he is now in confinement. The owner of the Alley was presented before the Grand Jury, and his license has been taken from him.

FROM THE NEW YORK AMERICAN, AUG. 12.

The brig Vermont arrived yesterday at quarantine from Blakely. Capt. Nichols, late master, (formerly sailing master of the Washington 74) who has a family at Brooklyn, died on the 7th instant, of yellow fever, when off the Delaware. A coloured man, named Thos. Hicks, a native of Long Island, died on the 7th of the same disease. The vessel came into port with only one man on board able to do duty, four sick men were taken to the hospital. The mate states that they were all sick and helpless on deck at the same time. Fortunately the vessel was favoured with mild weather, or they would all have been lost. When they sailed from Blakely they were all in good health.

FROM THE NEW YORK GAZETTE.

THE SPRINGS.

There were about fifteen hundred visiters at Saratoga and Ballston on Monday last. The governor, generals Van Rensselaer and Lewis, and other distinguished individuals, are at the former place, and the Spanish minister and Joseph Bonaparte at the latter. The principal public houses at Saratoga are filled with visitors, the greater part of whom are induced to prolong their stay in consequence of the various reports that reach them of the fever in this city, and which are frequently rendered alarming by the spirit of exaggeration exhibited by their narrators. The British minister, Mr. Canning, and suite, arrived at Saratoga on Monday.

FROM THE NEW YORK EVENING POST.

HEALTH OF THE CITY.

The reports for several days have been so favorable, and such efficient measures have at last been taken by the board of health to prevent the fever from spreading, that we begin to hope it will be arrested in its progress. No case has yet occurred that has not been clearly traced to the infected district, now enclosed by order of the board, and with which no communication is allowed. No vessels from sickly foreign ports are permitted to come to our wharves; and in short, every means which prudence could suggest has been adopted to put an effetual stop to the disease. Persons in the country, whose business may call them to the city, need not be under the least apprehension, if they will only avoid the infected district. The alarm which has been sounded abroad is certainly greater than facts will warrant. The number of deaths are not as great as they were last year at this time, when there was no yellow fever.

MEXICO.

Extract of a letter from a gentleman in Mexico, to his friend in Lexington, (Ken.) dated City of Mexico, June 7, 1822.

"This is the most resourceful, richest, poorest country at this moment, perhaps, in the universe. The climate here, within the tropics, is much cooler than near New Orleans. The city lies on the north side of a dead flat of rich low ground, surrounded by lofty mountains, and from 15 to 20 miles in diameter, in grass or under miserable cultivation, and ditched and canalled in all directions. The foot of the mountains is ornamented with numerous villages, and numberless churches, with lofty domes and spires, the interior of which present a blaze of the precious metals; yet the obstruction of the mines, the failure of commerce, the interruption of the miserable agriculture of the country, and the abolition of internal taxes, to popularise the revolution, have prostrated the finances of the country, and left the richest of its inhabitants in poverty. Circulating coin (specie) is hardly more scarce in your Lexington.

Iturbide.—Accounts received at Charleston from Havanna, inform us that the self created Emperor of Mexico, had re-established the Inquisition of the Friars—had persecuted libral and philanthropic men—would not permit the European Spaniards to return to their native country, nor enter his newly established empire; and had endeavored to prevent the exportation of the property which belonged to them. The people of New Spain are stated to be divided into four parties, viz. Imperialists, Republicans, Serviles, and Constitutionalists, which, it was not doubted, would occasion civil discord and intestine war.

A Miraculous Escape.—The house of Mr. Randal Jaggard, near Woodbury, N. J. was struck with lightning on the night of the 3d inst. and very much injured. The electric fluid first came in contact with the chimney, which it entirely destroyed—descended the chimney to the chamber, and melted a part of the shovel and tongs which had been placed across the hearth in covering the fire, from thence it was attracted by a fowling piece standing in the room, and descended the barrel, tore off the breech, melted the pan, and discharged the load; the next thing in its course was the bedstead, the head board of which it shattered to pieces. Mr. and Mrs. J. with a child, were in bed at the time, and were so stunned as to remain 15 or 20 minutes entirely insensible.

Counterfeiters.—A society has been formed of counterfeiters and horse stealers, which embraces the state of Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Georgia, North and South Carolina. The society has agents in these states who sell the horses stolen.—A man named James Vineyard, one of the gang, was shot at Washington, (Ga.) in attempting to rob a stable of a horse. Another, calling himself by different names, was riding about the country on a fine bay horse, with a good saddle, holsters and martingale, and having about $40,000 of counterfeit money in his possession. The civil power had adopted measures to put a stop to the career of these pests of society.

Health of Savannah.—It appears by the official report published at Savannah on the 31st ult. that there was on that day 26 cases of intermittent, and 5 remittent, and one of worm fever. The Savannah Republican remarks on this report "that notwithstanding there is a greater number of cases of fever, we have every reason to view our city as comparatively in a healthy condition, when we reflect that so great a majority of them are of the intermittent character; and that the committees have reported several of them as having resulted from intemperance."

Harper's Ferry, (Va.) Aug. 7.

CASUALTY.—We regret to learn that a serious and distressing accident occurred in Shepherdstown on Saturday last. It appears that some preparations were making, at the gun smith shop of Mr. Sheetz, for the discharge of rockets in the evening. For this purpose, a keg of powder was placed on one of the workbenches; when some person heedlessly snapped a fire-lock, which communicated a spark to the keg, and in an instant the building was demolished. Three persons were severely burnt, but escaped with life; one of them, it is said, has lost his sight. We have heard the names of but two of them: Simeon Turner and Wm. Fields.

WASHINGTON, (Pa.) Aug. 5.

MURDER!—On Wednesday last, William Crawford, a wealthy farmer of Fallowfield township, Washington county, was committed to jail in this place, for the murder of his son, Henry, the day before, at about the age of 28 years. This horrid deed is said to have had its origin in a disagreement which existed for some time between old Mr. Crawford and his wife, the mother of the deceased, she living at the time the murder was committed in the same house with the son, separate from the residence of the old man.—On the morning previous to his putting into execution his hellish purpose, it appears that he had declared he would kill his son that day. The instrument of death (a gun) was attempted to be wrested from him by some person present, who desisted on the old man's threatening to kill him if he did not cease to interfere. He deliberately took aim, we are informed, placing the gun against the cheek of the door, before which his son was sitting, and shot him dead on the spot.

In addition to the above particulars, a person who was present at the time says, the deceased had been repeatedly threatened by his father, but from the age and infirmities of the old man, he apprehended no danger except from the gun, which he had put out of order for his security; the father, however, had procured some person who repaired it.

The town of Oxford, in Chenango county, N. Y. was visited on the 4th inst. with a most destructive tornado, which did immense damage to the buildings, orchards, grain, &c. in that section of the country. Several buildings were prostrated—houses were unroofed, chimneys and fences blown down, and trees uprooted. In Oxford, the timber on several hundred acres was destroyed: The trees in several orchards were twisted off and hurled into the air, and their fruit scattered in every direction.

Four hundred dollars reward is offered by Knower & Hacen, of Montreal, for the apprehension of Benjamin Ruggles, by profession a Tanner, a native of Harrisburg, in the state of Pennsylvania. He absconded from Quebec about the 7th July, having defrauded his endorsers and creditors of a large sum of money, and is supposed to have gone either to Halifax, or the United States. He took with him about 6000 pounds, mostly in guineas or British gold.

The Macedonian.—The Norfolk Herald of the 12th inst. states, that two new cases of the disease prevailing among the crew of the Macedonian were reported on Wednesday, since when eight, we understand, have been reported convalescent. Five deaths have taken place since the arrival of the ship, in one of whom the navy has to deplore the loss of that active and intelligent officer Lieutenant George Pierce, first of the Macedonian, who died on Wednesday evening. Lieut. Pierce was a native of this State. The accounts from the Island last evening are quite encouraging; and we may indulge a hope that most, if not all, of the men now sick will recover.

FOREIGN ITEMS.

The following curious paragraphs are copied from late English papers:

Every suitable attention was paid to this distinguished gentleman: he visited the Royal George Yacht, and ships in the harbor, and afterward proceeded to Ryde.

From Canton.—By the Enterprize, capt. A man was found drowned in the mouth of the Cohanzy a short time since. He is reported to have been well dressed, and of a genteel appearance. The radishes were fit to eat when got at New York, were taken up for use as they were wanted. The box was lashed to the staunchions on the quarter deck.

The Agricultural Society of Bucks county, earnestly recommend to their fellow citizens, to strictly prohibit the practice of gunning on their lands, inasmuch as it is believed that the present alarming increase of insects is principally owing to the destruction of Birds. The damage done to the crops in that county the current year, is immense.

PHILADELPHIA.

Saturday, August 17, 1822.

Friend Minor, of the Village Record, in noticing the proposals by Bennett & Walton, Booksellers, of this city, for publishing a new and highly improved edition of Brooke's Gazetteer, has the following just observations:—

"We intended before now to have called the attention of our readers to it. To us it appears to be one of the most necessary books that can be brought into a family. A dictionary containing the names of all the Countries, Nations, Kingdoms, States, Counties, Mountains, Rivers, Islands, &c. in the world, with a short description stating the situation of, and whatever is remarkable in relation to each, it will be seen at once, must not only be valuable to the children, but useful to all; for how often is it that in reading we find the names of places mentioned, the situation of which we are ignorant of. A Gazetteer in the house explains the difficulty in a moment. We have never been very forward in recommending particular books, but we feel confident that whoever purchases this, will think their money well laid out."

All intercourse between this city and New-York, has been interdicted by an order of the Board of Health.

The Hon. Jonathan Russell, has pronounced a bill of indictment before the Grand Jury of the city of New-York, against Seth Hunt, Esq. for the libel alleged to be contained in the Queries of Ariel, lately published in the N. Y. Statesman.

A novel and singular experiment took place yesterday afternoon, in the Delaware river, opposite Market street, the object of which was to show the utility of the Life preserving Dress.—It is said, (for we did not witness the feat,) that the inventor jumped into the water, clad in his new apparel, the buoyancy of which sustained him from sinking, without any apparent difficulty, and much to the gratification of the spectators. The experiment will be repeated on Thursday afternoon next, between three and four o'clock, from on board one of the Baltimore line of Steamboats.

On Thursday afternoon, a fellow who pretended to be deaf and dumb, called at a house in Eighth street, and after regaling himself at the expense of the charitable female occupant, had the audacity to carry off an elegant gold watch which was hanging over the mantle piece.

Thirty-two cases of fever, of which 26 are said to be intermittent, 3 remittent, and 1 worm fever, were reported to the board of health of Savannah, on the 31st of July.

A number of colored persons have been bound over to appear at the next Mayor's court, to answer for their conduct at the church in Lombard-street, between Fifth and Sixth-street, on Sunday afternoon last. It seems that this church was built a few years since by a party of receders from the congregation of Allenites, in Sixth-street, near Lumbard, but that the African Bishop, lately acquiring in some way a title to it, went in procession at the head of his followers, on Sunday last, to consecrate it.—Before this ceremony, however, could be performed, a battle took place, in which the Allenites were completely victorious.—Union.

The paucity of poetical themes, says the Catskill Recorder, (or of poetical talent, if you please) is apparent from the objects to which rymers address their effusions. A late Philadelphia paper contains among its original poetry, an address "To the Moon," "To the New Moon," "To a Mouse," "To a Jackdaw," "To a Kitten," "Love."—We cannot, of course, object to the last; but we grieve to see it in such company.

A most daring robbery was committed in New-York on Wednesday night, at the house of Mr. John Francis. Between the hours of one and three o'clock, the chamber of Mr. William Ryder, on the second floor, in which himself and wife slept, was entered and a number of articles stolen therefrom.

New-York, Aug 16.

Captain Boss, of the Fame, from Curracoa, informs, that the Spanish frigate Ligera and brig of war Hercules, with nine transports, from Coro for Porto Cabello, watered at Curracoa, and sailed on the 28th, having on board General Morales and his army, to take command at that place.—The people at Coro were in a state of starvation. The brig Lion of New-York, was at Laguira, recruiting men and officers to join the blockading squadron at Porto Cabello.

Captain Shaw, a passenger in the Fame, informs, that Bolivar had entered Quito at the head of 20,000 men—that he took the place with the loss of 7000 men; the Spanish Royalists lost twelve thousand men, including their Commander. The place was declared independent four days after the battle.

FROM MEXICO.

Extract of a letter from a merchant in Tampico to his correspondent in N. Orleans, dated June 21.

"An express, just arrived from Mexico, brings information that the Emperor Iturbide has seized on a convoy which was about setting out for Vera Cruz, with 900,000 dollars, and appropriated the same towards paying the current expenses of his government; thus you see the poor Gachupins pay for the roast. In Mexico, the discontent is general, and many of the creoles even have or intend to emigrate, from disaffection to Iturbide, and through fear of the Holy Inquisition which is about to be restored."

FROM THE BOSTON PALLADIUM.

From the Brazils.—By Capt. Defrees, in 43 days from St. Salvador, we learn, that the Brazils remained in an unsettled state. Rio and Pernambuco had declared in favor of the young Prince, and unless more troops arrived soon at St. Salvador from Portugal, in a short time, it would, no doubt, follow the example. Cachocira, a village containing from 7 to 8000 inhabitants, situated about 50 miles from St. Salvador, had declared for the Prince. Troops marched from St. S. to quell the Revolutionists, two days before Capt. D. sailed, but the result was not known. There were but 1500 European troops at St. S. and perhaps about 1000 militia of Europeans.—Several thousand more troops were daily expected from Lisbon. The object of the Brazilians is to free themselves entirely from the mother country.

The Saturday Mails.

New-York, August 16.

The Philadelphia Board of Health, on Wednesday, prohibited all intercourse with the city of N. York. We do not complain; but certainly it was a most unnecessary measure. The city of New-York, generally, was never more healthy than at present, and we believe there was a less number of deaths in this city last week, than in Philadelphia. There has been no danger out of the infected district, and but little alarm, as every case has been distinctly traced to it. The district is now depopulated almost entirely, and is substantially fenced up. We have therefore good reason to believe that the disease will wholly diappear within a few days.
[Commercial Advertiser.

Interesting Strangers.—We observe by the Boston papers that Mr. Cerveau, his wife, five children and servants, have arrived at that place from Smyrna. Mr. C. is a French gentleman of high respectability, who has resided many years in the Turkish dominions, and his wife is a Greek, a native of the Island of Scio. The children are dressed in the costume of their native country, and have excited much curiosity at Boston. As the family intend coming southward, it is likely we shall have the pleasure of seeing these interesting strangers.

Smugglers.—A gang, consisting of forty smugglers, is stated, in the Montreal papers, to have attacked the dwelling of W. Hamilton, Esq. his majesty's collector of customs at Stanstead, broke the door, removed the goods seized and lodged there, threatened the relatives of Mr. Hamilton, that unless they left the house the following day, they would be thrown into a mill pond adjoining. They were armed with muskets, pistols, &c.

An unfortunate man of the name of Arthur Simonton, died in Bridewell on Wednesday evening. He was taken up in the Park two or three days ago, in a state of mental derangement—stripping his clothes off there in broad day, &c. &c. and secured for the time in Bridewell. Day before yesterday, he was discharged; but brought up again the same day, by some of the citizens at the North River, into which quarter he had wandered; and where it appeared to them he was about to drown himself. He was re-committed accordingly, and yesterday morning found in his apartment a corpse.

Enormous Seal.—An animal of this description, weighing four hundred pounds, is stated to have been caught in the river St. Lawrence, opposite Montreal, on the 3d instant.

Sea Serpent.—The Portland Gazette of Tuesday states, that "several gentlemen at Nahant have recently had a distant view of this celebrated monster of the deep, whose periodical return is now ascertained. Since which he has been seen every day by different individuals of the highest respectability—and we hear a letter has been received in town describing the whole of his appearance."

A woman petrified.—An Eaton, Ohio, paper, of July 2, contains the following:—

An elderly gentleman, who died in Fayette county, state of Kentucky, previous to his death requested that his daughter's remains should be disinterred and deposited by the side of his own.—His daughter had been buried about eleven years, in the county of Bourbon, Ky. After his decease, the old gentleman's request was complied with.—To the great surprise and astonishment of those engaged in raising the daughter's remains, her body was found to be entire, and of its full size. On a minute examination it was discovered to be perfectly petrified—its specific gravity was about the same as that of common lime stone. The coffin was entirely decayed. Her countenance had undergone so small an alteration that her husband, it is said, fainted on beholding her.

It was given in evidence, before the committee of the House of Commons, that the consumption of dutiable spirits, during the year, amounted, in England, to somewhat more than one-third of a gallon; in Ireland, to three-fourths of a gallon; and in Scotland, to one gallon and a quarter, for each individual. The average is taken on the gross population; and so remarkable a difference is attributed principally to the quality.

As a proof of the healthful state of the inhabitants of the city of London, says an English paper, which within its walls contains ninety-seven parishes, we learn by the last weekly bills of mortality, that the number of deaths did not exceed fifteen.

The English papers continue to detail the distresses which yet exist in Ireland.

Boston.—Mrs Battersby of the New-York theatre has been engaged for five nights, and made her first appearance on Monday eve, as Juliana in the comedy of the Honey Moon. Therese, having been honored with great applause, will shortly be repeated—as will also the melo-drama of Adeline.

Cincinnati.—On the 2d inst. Miss Seymour's benefit took place at the Pavilion Theatre—the comedy called Twenty years ago, and the farce of the Spoil'd Child, were the entertainments.

Foreign.—Mr. Matthews, the comedian, closed his season at the Opera house, London, on the 22d of June. On this occasion he addressed the audience, and after the usual compliments, and an allusion to his contemplated visit to the U. States, he concluded, "I trust to be enabled to bring back a new budget for your amusement, and all my powers of observation shall be roused to their utmost to collect such materials in my travels as shall prove that I have not absented myself from your smiles in vain." He was to sail on the 1st inst. in the ship Wm. Thompson, for N. York.

"The Fortunes of Nigel" have been already dramatized in London, by Mr. Terry, and the piece is to be brought forward on an early day at the Hay Market Theatre.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Justinian must not expect that we will subject ourselves to the liability of a prosecution, by the publication of his remarks as they stand. If he is willing to confide in us, and will make a previous acknowledgement, we shall not hesitate, then, to stamp the character of the seducer with the odium it deserves.

Sketches, No. 7, will be given in our next.

There has been two or three omissions this week, which shall be attended to.

Several correspondents in the city, have latterly sent us their cogitations through the post-office—now as we neither like this mode, nor the expence with which it is attended, in future, their communications had better be left in our letter box.

THE OLIO.

"Variety's the very spice of life,
That gives it all its flavour."

Epitaph on a young man at Chichester, E.

"Art thou in health and spirits gay?
I too was so, the other day,
And thought myself from death as safe
As thou who read'st my epitaph."

Pun.—Mr. Andrew Cherry, the performer, was written to, a few years ago, with an offer of a very capital engagement from a manager, who, on a former occasion, had not behaved altogether well to him.—Cherry sent him word, that he had been bit by him once, and he was resolved that he should not make two bites of A. Cherry.

The Joke.—When Lord Townshend was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the then provost of Dublin lost no opportunity of repeating his solicitations for places. "My dear Haley," said his lordship, "you have a great many things, and I have nothing to give but a majority of Dragoons." "I accept it then," replied the provost.—"What, you take a majority?" answered his lordship, "zounds, it is impossible, I only meant it as a joke." "And I accept it," replied the provost, "merely to shew you how well I can take a joke."

Excellent Motto.—Augustine had a few lines written on his tablet, intimating that whoever attacked the character of the absent, were to be excluded. What a pity such a motto is not more popular at present.

Cookery.—Of all the fowls of the air (says the "Cook's Oracle,") commend me to a shin of beef, for there's marrow for the master, meat for the mistress, gristle for the servants, and bones for the dogs.

FOREIGN ARTICLES.

A REMARKABLE CIRCUMSTANCE.

In the year 1793, a woman acting as cook to a lady at Northallerton, in cutting a turnip, found in the heart of it a gold ring, and immediately made her mistress acquainted with so extraordinary a circumstance. The lady sent for the gardener's wife, and asked her whether the ring she then had upon her finger was the same she had been married with. The woman replied that it was not, as she had unfortunately lost her wedding ring about a year or two after her marriage, from off her finger, whilst weeding in the garden. She was then asked if she should know the ring again if it was shown to her; to this she replied that the ring she had lost had a particular mark on it, which she described. The ring found in the heart of the turnip was then produced, and was proved, from the mark, to be the identical ring lost by Mrs. Wood, the gardener's wife, and immediately restored to her, after it had been in the ground 10 or 12 years.—London paper.

Sudden Madness.—At Chelmsford fair, lately, during the grimaces and buffoonries exhibited in front of one of the shows, the clown went raving mad. He jumped off the stage, and ran through the town, followed by a number of boys who were ignorant of the man's mental derangement, until he got into a field, where he fixed himself against the gate-post, and literally tore the scalp from his head; and had not some persons secured him, he would totally have destroyed himself. He now lies in a state which affords but little hope of his recovery.

Thadey Doorely, a respectable farmer, died last May near the Hill of Allen, county of Kildare, Ireland, at the age of 126 years and three months.—His faculties were perfect to the last; and he could, until about six months before his disease, join in any sports of the field. He was married a second time about 19 years ago, at the age of 107 to a woman of 31 years of age.

An Affectionate Rattlesnake.—The Petersburgh Intelligencer announces an attractive exhibition of serpents in that city. Among them is a full grown Rattlesnake, (perhaps the most deadly poisonous of the serpentine race,) upwards of four feet in length, five or six inches in circumference, with its fangs and rattles entire, so completely domesticated as to be handled with perfect safety, as to coil itself upon the neck and kiss the cheeks of its master—in short, to be as completely under his command as his dog, and to manifest the same grateful affection towards him! There is no disputing about taste; but it would require some time to reconcile us to a live Rattlesnake for a cravat, or even to receive a kiss from such a loving animal.

"What's this dull town to me?
"Robin's not here."

Robert Adair, who was at Poughkeepsie, (N. Y.) with a load of peaches, died in his boat on the wharf on the night of the 4th instant, in a state of intoxication.
